FORD LAUDS LANDON AND ENDORSES HIM FOR PRESIDENCY

Auto Manufacturer Says Republican Candidate is Able to Solve Nation's Problems

RAPS SOCIAL SECURITY

Says It Is A "Cruel Joke To Millions of Workers in American Industry"

By William K. Hutchinson
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 14—(INS)—Governor Alfred M. Landon, a modestly successful business man from a "typical prairie state," was given a sweeping endorsement for the Presidency today by Henry Ford, one of the world's most successful business men.

Ford praised Landon as a man fully qualified for the Presidency. He expressed a hope that Landon would be elected, and a belief in his ability to solve the nation's problems.

The world's greatest auto manufacturer also denounced the Roosevelt "social security" program as a "cruel joke" to the millions of workers in American industry. He described it as a law fixing "social security at the level of about fifty cents a day twenty years from now." He pleaded with workers to inquire into the law, under which the Federal Government begins collecting payroll taxes from both employers and employes' pay envelopes next January.

Ford issued a prepared statement endorsing Landon, before the Republican nominee left here to continue his campaign tour of the industrial areas of Michigan. Landon headed northward for visit to Flint, Lansing, Jackson, Battle Creek, Kalamazoo and Grand Rapids. He will be in the latter city tomorrow morning, when President Roosevelt visits it.

Landon departed with Republican leaders confidently predicting he would carry Michigan, following his dramatic challenge to President Roosevelt to tell the American people before election day whether he proposes to revive the NRA and AAA or to suggest amendments to the Constitution. He charged the President's silence on his future plans was an "attempt to dodge the fundamental issue of this campaign." Landon also pledged himself to ask Congress to repeal every law, conferring "autocratic powers" on the President.

The Ford endorsement of Landon was complete. The original copy was written in longhand by the auto manufacturer, following Landon's visit to his home yesterday afternoon. The couple spent several hours together, later visiting the Greenfield Village where Ford is recreating the America of yesterday. There they heard a school of children recite psalms and sing old-fashioned hymns. Landon was touched by the recital.

It was at this conference that Ford studied Landon. Here are his conclusions:

"This was my first opportunity to meet the man who has brought this campaign back to American issues. I gained three very distinct impressions of him: first, he is exceptionally well-informed, and has had experience along many lines; second, he is able to speak his mind in the frankest possible way—he is open and honest in his opinions; third, he knows where he stands because he has thought things through.

"Governor Landon's mind has not been warped. My judgment would be that he would be a hard man to turn

TELLS ABOUT STOCKING DELAWARE WITH FISH

Joel Young, State Fish Warden, Addresses Fish and Game Association

75 MEMBERS ATTEND

More than 75 members and guests of the Bristol Fish and Game Protective Association gathered in the Elks' Home last evening when the Association met for its regular business meeting and listened to talks by C. Joel Young, State Fish Warden, and Charles W. Wessell, Chief of the Division of Propagation and Game Farms in Pennsylvania. Theodore Megargee, Edgely, also showed several films of talking pictures.

Mr. Young told the audience of the problems of raising game fish for the streams of the State. Trout are much easier to raise than bass, because bass must be fed on live food, but a program is being worked out now so that bass will be started on live food and then switched over to other foods.

The Mill Pond project, Young told the audience, has been accepted by WPA officials, but as yet no funds have been allocated for the work. A large sum of money is required for this work which, if started, will be divided into three separate projects. If the pond is drained and the source drained and cleaned the State plans to stock the Mill Pond very heavily with bass, Mr. Young pointed out. This will provide a good fishing ground for this end of the county, the upper end already having a good fishing area.

Young also discussed the subject of stocking the Delaware River with fish. An organization now exists, composed of representatives of the states of New York, New Jersey, Delaware and Pennsylvania, which has as its object the ending of pollution in the Delaware.

The speaker also pointed out that the Delaware is the only body of water in

TRACTOR DEMOLISHED

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 14—Edward G. Miller, 42, a Chalfont farmer, leaped to safety yesterday, before a Doylestown-Philadelphia Reading Railroad passenger train crashed into a two-ton tractor near here. The locomotive was sprayed with flaming gasoline and pieces of metal as it dragged the wreckage nearly 500 yards. None of the 25 passengers were hurt.

McSPARRAN, FORMER MASTER OF GRANGE, SUPPORTS LANDON'S CANDIDACY AND GIVES HIS REASONS FOR SO DOING

John A. McSparran, former Democratic nominee for Governor of Pennsylvania, former Master of the State Grange, former Democratic Secretary of Agriculture, and prominent for many years in reform movements in Pennsylvania, has endorsed the candidacy of Governor Alfred M. Landon, Kansas, for the Presidency and in a statement says:

"I could not support President Roosevelt for re-election without violating every principle for which I have fought throughout my entire life.

"In taking this stand I do not desert the Democratic Party. Rather I stand where the Democratic Party has stood ever since its inception, until a few years ago its name was stolen by those who masquerade like wolves in sheep's clothing and use its respectable application to cover a myriad of New Deal sins.

"Democrats always have stood for orderly government under the Constitution. Democrats have constantly opposed the perils of federal interference with the rights of the states. Those who parade politically under the once glorious banners of the Democracy would substitute regimentation for freedom; and government by individuals for government by law. They are not Democrats in any sense of the word and as a Democrat, I cannot associate with them.

"My whole life has been devoted to the welfare and progress of the American farmer. The farmer has always believed in a pay-as-you-go, economical type of government.

"The farmer heard the President as a candidate promise to reduce the cost of government twenty-five per cent. and to lower taxes.

"The farmer heard Governor Earle as a candidate pledge himself to reduce taxes on real estate.

"The farmer no longer trusts either of these gentlemen, because he has seen both of these campaign promises utterly disregarded.

"Instead of economy, the President has piled debt on debt.

"Instead of tax relief, Governor Earle has added new taxes by the million—with the farmer paying more than his just share.

"I have hoped against hope that out of the turmoil and confusion of thought at Washington there might finally come one single constructive thought for the solution of the farm problem. Regretfully I have come to the conclusion that although billions have been squandered, which the farmer will have to help repay in heavier taxes, no sound plan for the rehabilitation of agriculture has as yet been devised by any of those who are now asking to be retained in power another four years.

"Pennsylvania farmers received in so-called A.A.A. 'benefits' a little more than three million dollars. In return, the people of Pennsylvania were compelled to pay more than $34,000,000 in processing taxes—money which, for the most part, otherwise would have been available for the purchase of foodstuffs raised on our farms.

"So it has been all along the line. The New Deal has tossed a crust to the farmers of Pennsylvania, and has collected from them the price of a loaf of bread.

"The farmer has seen the prices of the things he buys increased more rapidly than the prices of the commodities he has to sell. He has seen in the Roosevelt reciprocal treaties the instruments by which huge importations of milk, cheese and other products have been brought into sharp competition with those of American farms. He is beginning to understand that the Roosevelt soil conservation program may mean the wrecking of the huge dairy industry of this and other states.

"So much for my opposition to the New Deal from the standpoint of constitutional government, the rights of the states and the interests of the farmers.

"There is another and even greater peril. It has been my observation that in other countries the first objective of those bent upon breaking down constitutional forms of government has been to destroy the effectiveness of farm organizations.

"I see the same determination in this country. I rejoice that this danger has been sensed by the organized farms of Pennsylvania, who, through the twenty-nine state-wide organizations represented by the State Agricultural Council have thrown the challenge back into the teeth of those who have been secretly plotting their ruin.

"I stand with the Agricultural Council in solemn protest against the type of government which if it is not checked in what it is trying to do will wreck our American institutions and reduce the American farmer to the role of a government controlled puppet, subject to the crop-regulating and price-fixing whims of the worst crew of reckless experimentalists, starry-eyed theorists and Constitution wreckers in the history of the country.

"The farmer who votes for the re-election of President Roosevelt votes against all that for which American farmers have been contending for generations. If they vote for Landon they will be voting for practically the same program that Roosevelt ran on four years ago.

"JOHN A. McSPARRAN."

WHAT LANDON STANDS FOR: LOWER TAXES

(New York American, October 13, 1936)

Governor Landon regards the TAXING POWER of the Government as a constant THREAT against the SECURITY OF THE PEOPLE.

He knows taxes are necessary for the support of essential governing agencies, and that GOOD CITIZENS willingly pay for GOOD GOVERNMENT.

But he realizes every dollar a citizen PAYS IN TAXES is a dollar taken OUT OF HIS WAGES.

The money the housewife pays in taxes CANNOT BUY BREAD FOR HER FAMILY.

The taxes paid by the farmer REDUCE his PURCHASING POWER.

Taxes paid by employers NEVER REACH PAY-ROLLS.

Governor Landon believes, therefore, the BEST government is the one that puts the LEAST tax load on its people.

He knows all WASTE in government is translated to the people in terms of NEEDLESS TAXES.

He considers it a SACRED TRUST upon government to husband the people's money, to SPEND WISELY and to SPEND HONESTLY.

Governor Landon believes, above all, that a government that MAKES TAXATION A BURDEN is a government that has BETRAYED ITS TRUST.

ARREST MAN ACCUSED OF HOLD-UP AND ROBBERY OF GEORGE EVERETT; CONFESSION OBTAINED, SAY OFFICERS

James B. Inmon, 22, Trenton, Taken Into Custody on Street in Trenton—Denies Guilt at First, But When Identified He Breaks Down and Confesses—Got $19, Cigarets

Within 30 hours after staging a hold-up and attacking the proprietor of a service station in Lower Makefield Township, a few miles from Woodside, a colored man was placed under arrest in Trenton, N. J., and confessed the crime.

The arrest was announced today by Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo who stated that James B. Inmon, 22, Bellevue Ave., Trenton, N. J., and formerly of Miami, would be brought into Bucks County sometime today, given a hearing and then taken to Doylestown.

Inmon is over six feet tall and weighs 220 pounds. He was arrested last night on Warren street, Trenton, by Russo, and Trenton Detectives McDonald and Welsh and Constable Charles P. Aita, Bristol.

Inmon refused at first to go with the officers and rebelled at getting into their car. He denied any knowledge of holding-up George Everett, 64, Swamp Road and Lower Makefield Road. He was taken to the Mercer Hospital in Trenton where he was confronted with Everett who identified him and who said positively that Inmon was the man who had attacked him.

The officers then went to Inmon's room and there they found cigarettes alleged to have been stolen from the Everett place and also a pair of trousers which were blood stained.

Inmon was taken to the Trenton police headquarters and grilled and then confessed that he had attacked Everett and robbed him Monday morning at about 11.30 o'clock.

Inmon told the officers, it is stated, that he went to the Everett place. He asked Everett for some bread which was given to him and also some sardines. He then demanded $2 and was given $1. Then Inmon, say the officers, attacked Everett, threatening him with a knife. Inmon told the officers that he knocked Everett down every time that he got on his feet and finally left the man lying on the floor in a dazed condition. Inmon got $19 and some cigarettes.

Everett was found unconscious at his service station and was taken to the Mercer Hospital, where he is still confined suffering with painful injuries.

MORRISVILLE SCHOOLS SEEK PREFERRED LISTING

Effort Made to Receive More Financial Aid From State of Penna.

REPORTS ARE MADE

MORRISVILLE, Oct. 14—An effort is being made by the Morrisville Board of Education to be placed in the preferred class, in an effort to receive more financial aid from the State of Pennsylvania.

In order to get in this class the board must show it is necessary to have more State funds with which to operate the schools, Director Alvin R. Pratt reported at a recent meeting of the school board.

Pratt also reported the finance committee had set the tuition rate for 11th and 12th grade pupils $8.60 per pupil per month. This is less than last year when the rate was $9.40. The decrease is because the board is compelled to deduct from the cost the amount received from the State. Only certain fixed charges may be included in figuring the rate.

Appointment of Melvin Walper as a teacher to succeed Kenneth Miller, who resigned, was formally approved. His salary will be $1,000 per year.

The finance committee reported that up to October 1 there was collected in 1936 school taxes a total of $48,336.03.

Announcement was made that the members of the board of education and their wives will give a reception to teachers at the home of Miss Rachel Carver, Trenton and Pennsylvania avenues, November 11. The affair will be informal.

The board voted to have the names and addresses of all teachers sent to the assessors so that the names of all teachers will be placed on the tax books. This procedure is done annually.

The new setup for janitors was reported to be working out favorably. Under the new system Raymond Bunting is now head janitor and all the others report directly to him instead of the supervising principal.

Challenges New Dealers

Harrisburg, Oct. 14—The Lonergan Senate Committee investigating the campaign expenditures had been challenged today to "place the Republican and Democratic contributors side by side in a newspaper."

The challenge was made by Jay Cooke, chairman of the Republican Finance Committee for the National Republican Committee in Pennsylvania, who reported his group had received more than 83,000 contributions to date.

"I call the Lonergan Committee's attention to the fact that not a penny of this came from the poor purses of the PWA workers," he said, "or New Deal assessments upon office authorities, contractors or others, but that these 83,000 persons gave freely and purely for patriotic reasons."

State Convention Told Of To W. C. T. U. Members

An interesting meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held last evening at the home of Mrs. Mary Duhamel, with 22 in attendance.

Mrs. A. B. Sands, in the devotional service, read from St. Paul's message to the Thessalonians, whose problems were similar to those of today. As a demonstration of the Department of Child Welfare, Miss Jane Rogers and Miss Laura Ellis presented a project illustrating the danger of giving to a little child remedies containing alcohol and narcotics.

The president, Mrs. Harry Headley, announced the visit to Bristol public schools of Mr. and Mrs. James Killip, the former the president of the Youths' Temperance Council of the state. The visit was in recognition of Francis Willard Day. Several teachers told of interest aroused in the children by the talks and demonstrations.

Mrs. Duhamel gave a very fine account of the state convention of the W. C. T. U., held at Lebanon October 1st to 5th. "An address by state president, Mrs. Ella B. Black, as well as those of noted speakers, educators, and men of affairs, sounded the hopeful note that the great army of dries was being aroused to action by direful results of repeal of prohibition, and will soon force better conditions to prevail," it was stated.

Action of the National Education Association at the 1935 convention, and reindorsed in 1936, was noted with great satisfaction. A clause in the platform is as follows: "The National Education Association urges complete and scientific instruction in schools regarding effects of alcohol and narcotics on the human body and the social organization, and expresses its disapproval of any false advertising or propaganda on the subject."

The hostess served tasty refreshments.

Search For Truck Driver

Philadelphia, Oct. 14—Homicide Squad detectives today joined in a search for a truck driver who allegedly pummelled William Beggs, Jr., 16, for stealing a ride and then pushed him to his death in a stream of traffic. Pasquale Boccasini, 36, the operator of the car which killed the boy, told police he saw the truck driver push the boy. The momentum of the shove snapped the youth's head forward and crashed into the windshield of Boccasini's car. He suffered a fractured skull and died almost instantly.

PREJUDICES

Prejudice is one of the most omnipotent and omnipresent factors in the daily life of man. It obtrudes itself into every human act and dictates to men and women as the master dictates to his slave. Impartiality is only a relative term. Man doesn't know complete mental neutrality, although he frequently claims to be impartial and unprejudiced.

The witness stand in the courtroom is a perfect mirror for the reflection of prejudice. Each witness betrays his sympathies by his attitude on the stand and by his answers to questions put to him. While he may deliberately desire to conceal any prepossession he always interjects his opinion in his testimony.

While the politically independnt profess no preference for party they invariably reveal a predilection, although, to be sure, it may be of very slight margin. Very often people are not aware of their prejudices and opinions on certain issues or questions because they have not discussed nor given thought to those matters. That which best illustrates the human instinct of prejudice is the immediate reaction upon the average mind of some new question. In such instances it usually is found that the average individual has reached an opinion before learning all the facts in the case.

Humanity will always entertain its prejudices and preferences, but a great portion of it no longer seeks to force those prejudices and preferences, and a great many still do seek to force these on mankind. Prejudice is not such a reprehensible institution unless it forms an alliance with intolerance.

LONG LIFE ON THE FARM

If you would live to a ripe old age go to or remain on the farm.

This is one of the interesting findings made by the public health service in a study covering 10 states. Agricultural workers in the states studied were shown to have a much lower death rate than successful business and professional men.

The mortality rate of agricultural workers per 1,000 population, between the ages of 15 and 64, was 6.2 per cent. That of professional men was 7 per cent. The highest rate, 13.1 per cent, was for unskilled workers, while the rate for all classes was 8.7 per cent. Contributing factors to the high death rate in the unskilled class included diet, housing, amount of medical care, contact with infected persons and low income. Tuberculosis and pneumonia were the two most outstanding causes, with accidents ranking third.

POCKETBOOK FACTS ABOUT YOUR TAXES

National Debts Boost State Debts

The Republican platform pledge to "stop the folly of uncontrolled spending" means relief for the taxpayers.

Under the New Deal the Federal Government has indulged in an orgy of extravagance. The States and local governments have followed suit, both because of requirements of the Federal Government in agreeing to finance the major part of relief costs and because of acceptance of the New Deal spending policies in their own fields.

Taxes have been increased by the Roosevelt administration and by the States and local bodies. Heavy borrowings to meet deficits have kept tax increases below the rate of increase of expenditures, but taxes must be levied in the future to pay off the mortgage represented by debts.

"THE BIG FOUR" by Agatha Christie

CHAPTER XXV

"I think, Captain Hastings, that you will write that letter. See, I have a cable form here. The message I shall write on it depends on you, and means life or death for your wife."

The sweat broke out on my brow. My tormentor continued, smiling amiably, and speaking with perfect sangfroid:—

"There, captain, the pen is ready to your hand. You have only to write. If not—"

"If not?" I echoed.

"If not, that lady that you love dies—and dies slowly. My master, Li Chang Yen, amuses himself in his spare hours by devising new and ingenious methods of torture."

"My God!" I cried. "You fiend! Not that—you wouldn't do that—"

"Shall I recount to you some of his devices?"

Without heeding my cry of protest, his speech flowed on—evenly, serenely—till with a cry of horror I clapped my hands to my ears.

"It is enough, I see. Take up the pen and write."

"You would not dare—"

"Your speech is foolishness, and you know it. Take up the pen and write."

"If I do?"

"Your wife goes free. The cable shall be despatched immediately."

"How do I know that you will keep faith with me?"

"I swear it to you on the sacred tombs of my ancestors. Moreover, judge for yourself—why should I wish to do her harm? Her detention will have answered its purpose."

"And—and Poirot?"

"We will keep him in safe custody until we have concluded our operations. Then we will let him go."

"Will you swear that also on the tombs of your ancestors?"

"I have sworn one oath to you. That should be sufficient."

My heart sank. I was betraying my friend—to what? For a moment I hesitated—then the terrible alternative rose like a nightmare before my eyes. Cinderella—in the hands of these Chinese devils, dying by slow torture—

A groan rose to my lips. I seized the pen. Perhaps by careful wording of the letter, I could convey a warning, and Poirot would be enabled to avoid the trap. It was the only hope.

But even that hope was not to remain. The Chinaman's voice rose, suave and courteous.

"Permit me to dictate to you."

He paused, consulted a sheaf of notes that lay by his side, and then dictated as follows:—

"Dear Poirot, I think I'm on the track of Number Four. A Chinaman came this afternoon and lured me down here with a bogus message. Luckily I saw through his little game in time, and gave him the slip. Then I turned the tables on him, and managed to do a bit of shadowing on my own account—rather neatly too, I flatter myself. I'm getting a bright young lad to carry this to you. Give him a half a crown, will you? That's what I promised him if it was delivered safely. I'm watching the house, and daren't leave. I shall wait for you until six o'clock, and if you haven't come then, I'll have a try at getting into the house on my own. It's too good a chance to miss, and, of course, the boy mightn't find you. But if he does, get him to bring you down here right away. And cover up those precious moustaches of yours in case anyone's watching out from the house and might recognize you.

"Yours in haste,
"A. H."

Every word that I wrote plunged me deeper in despair. The thing was diabolically clever. I realized how closely every detail of our life must be known. It was just such an epistle as I might have penned myself. The acknowledgment that the Chinaman who had called that afternoon had endeavored to "lure me away" discounted any good I might have done by leaving my "sign" of four books. It had been a trap, and I had seen through it, that was what Poirot would think. The time, too, was cleverly planned. Poirot, on receiving the note, would have just time to rush off with his innocent-looking guide, and that he would do so, I knew. My determination to make my way into the house would bring him post-haste. He always displayed a ridiculous distrust of my capacities. He would be convinced that I was running into danger without being equal to the situation, and would rush down to take command of the situation.

But there was nothing to be done. I wrote as bidden. My captor took the note from me, read it, then nodded his head approvingly and handed it to one of the silent attendants who disappeared with it behind one of the silken hangings on the wall which masked a doorway.

With a smile the man opposite to me picked up a cable form and wrote. He handed it to me.

It read: "Release the white bird with all despatch."

I gave a sigh of relief.

"You will send it at once?" I urged.

He smiled, and shook his head.

"When M. Hercule Poirot is in my hands it shall be sent. Not until then."

"But you promised—"

"If this device fails, I may have need of our white bird—to persuade you to further efforts."

I grew white with anger.

"My heavens! If you—"

He waved a long slim yellow hand.

"Be reassured, I do not think it will fail. And the moment M. Poirot is in our hands, I will keep my oath."

"If you play me false."

"I have sworn it by my honored Ancestors. Have no fear. Rest here awhile. My servants will see to your needs whilst I am absent."

I was left alone in this strange underground nest of luxury. The second Chinese attendant had reappeared. One of them brought food and drink and offered it to me, but I waved them aside. I was sick—sick—at heart—

And then suddenly the master reappeared tall and stately in his silken robes. He directed operations. By his orders I was hustled back through the cellar and tunnel into the original house I had entered. There they took me into a ground floor room. The windows were shuttered, but one could see through the cracks into the street. An old ragged man was shuffling along the opposite side of the road, and when I saw him make a sign to the window, I understood that he was one of the gang on watch.

"It is well," said my Chinese friend. "Hercule Poirot has fallen into the trap. He approaches now—and alone except for the boy who guides him. Now, Captain Hastings, you have still one more part to play. Unless you show yourself he will not enter the house. When he arrives opposite, you must go out on the step and beckon him in."

"What?" I cried, revolted.

"You play that part alone. Remember the price of failure. If Hercule Poirot suspects anything is amiss and does not enter the house, your wife dies by the Seventy lingering Deaths! Ah! Here he is."

With a beating heart, and a feeling of deathly sickness, I looked through the crack in the shutters. In the figure walking along the opposite side of the street I recognized my friend at once, though his coat collar was turned up and an immense yellow muffler hid the bottom part of his face. But there was no mistaking that walk, and the poise of that egg-shaped head.

It was Poirot, coming to my aid in all good faith, suspecting nothing amiss. By his side ran a typical London urchin, grimy of face and ragged of apparel.

Poirot paused, looking across at the house, whilst the boy spoke to him eagerly and pointed. It was the time for me to act. I went out in the hall. At a sign from the tall Chinaman, one of the servants unlatched the door.

"Remember the price of failure," said my enemy in a low voice.

I was outside on the steps. I beckoned to Poirot. He hastened across.

"Aha! So all is well with you, my friend. I was beginning to be anxious. You managed to get inside? Is the house empty, then?"

"Yes," I said, in a voice I strove to make natural. "There must be a secret way out of it somewhere. Come in and let us look for it."

I stepped back across the threshold. In all innocence Poirot prepared to follow me.

And then something seemed to snap in my head. I saw only too clearly the part I was playing—the part of Judas.

"Back, Poirot!" I cried. "Back for your life. It's a trap. Never mind me. Get away at once."

Even as I spoke—or rather shouted my warning hands gripped me like a vice. One of the Chinese servants sprang past me to grab Poirot.

I saw the latter spring back, his arm raised, then suddenly a dense volume of smoke was rising round me, choking me—killing me—

I felt myself falling—suffocating—this was death—

I came to myself slowly and painfully—all my senses dazed. The first thing I saw was Poirot's face. He was sitting opposite me watching me with an anxious face. He gave a cry of joy when he saw me looking at him.

"Ah, you revive—you return to yourself. All is well! My friend—my poor friend!"

"Where am I?" I said painfully.

"Where? But look around!"

I looked round me. True enough, I was in the old familiar surroundings. And in the grate were the identical four knobs of coal I had carefully spilt there.

Poirot had followed my glance.

"But yes, that was a famous idea of yours—that and the books. See you, if they should say to me any time, 'That friend of yours, that Hastings, he has not the great brain, is it not so?' I shall reply to them: 'You are in error.' It was an idea magnificent and superb that occurred to you there."

"You understood their meaning then?"

"Am I an imbecile? Of course I understood. It gave me just the warning I needed, and the time to mature my plans. Somehow or other the Big Four had carried you off. With what object? Clearly not for your pretty eyes—equally clearly not because they feared you and wanted to get you out of the way. No, their object was plain. You would be used as a decoy to get the great Hercule Poirot into their clutches. I have long been prepared for something of the kind. I make my little preparations, and presently, sure enough, the messenger arrives—such an innocent little street urchin. Me, I swallow everything, and hasten away with him, and, very fortunately, they permit you to come out on the doorstep. That was my one fear, that I should have to dispose of them before I had reached the place where you were concealed, and that I should have to search for you—perhaps in vain—afterwards."

In Higher Taxes, Higher Living Costs, Fewer Jobs

In 1935 the New Deal was given $4,800,000,000 of the taxpayers' money, to create jobs.

In 1936 it came back for—and received—$1,500,000,000 more, and blamed industry for not cutting down the number of unemployed.

In Two Years the New Deal Has Received More Than Six Thousand Millions of Dollars to "Prime the Pump" and We Still Have Ten Million Unemployed.

The Bulk of This Almost Inconceivable Sum of Money Must Come from the Industrial States, and, in the Words of President Roosevelt Himself, Can Come From Nowhere, in the Final Analysis, Than "From the Sweat of Those Who Labor"—(His Exact Language).

Well, let's look at the facts and see why $1 out of every $5 that you spend is taxes; or, if you're not working, why you haven't a job. For it must be clear that the dollars that industry has to pay for taxes cannot be paid out for wages, too.

Let's see who it is that is keeping you paying for 10,000,000 unemployed.

Industry has very little to do with the State of New Mexico.

New Mexico had 6,500 unemployed in 1930; it has 25,000 on the relief payroll in 1936.

New Mexico has a population of 402,000, and $59,839,770 of Federal funds has gone into New Mexico in three years—about $700 a family.

Automobile registrations jumped 11½% in New Mexico last year, and there's a car to almost every family.

New Mexico paid $1,108,714 in State auto taxes last year, but only $584,841 in all income taxes to the Federal Government.

The people of Pennsylvania and similar States will have to pay that $59,839,770—in higher taxes and fewer jobs.

The mining and farming State of Arizona with a population of 435,000 (less than one-fourth that of Philadelphia) registered 103,122 motor cars in 1935, an average of at least one to a family.

The $883,000 that Arizona pays in Federal income tax won't even meet the interest on the $64,513,688 that the New Deal has dumped into that State in three years.

Pennsylvania and like States will pay it. Our workers will go without cars, and even without jobs, because they and their fellow industrial workers must pay for Arizona's $64,513,688.

In 1930 the non-industrial State of South Carolina had 19,300 unemployed. There are now 54,000 on the relief payroll.

In three years the New Deal has poured $108,163,475 into South Carolina, and in 1935 motor car registrations in that State jumped 16.3%.

More taxes and fewer jobs for the industrial States, while relief payrolls and automobile purchases go up together in the non-industrial State of South Carolina.

Nevada, with a population of 91,000 (fewer people than in each of 6 Pennsylvania cities, or any one of 26 Pennsylvania counties) receives from the New Deal $1,500 a year for each person on the relief payroll.

That State has been receiving 10 times as much from the Federal Government as it contributes to it—which may explain why motor car registrations in that State increased 8.2% in 1935—an automobile for every third person in the State.

You will finance Nevada's joy-ride.

The farming and mining State of Montana has a population of only 531,000.

Motor car registrations took the astounding jump of 16.7% in 1935—the 149,712 registrations averaging better than one car to each family.

During the last 3 years Montana has received from the New Deal 10 times the amount she has paid in Federal taxes—and the Government recently rushed more millions west.

In higher taxes, higher living costs, and fewer jobs, you and your fellow workers will pay for the glory that is Montana under the New Deal.

For, as President Roosevelt proclaimed in that famous speech at Pittsburgh, on October 19, 1932:

"OUR WORKERS MAY NEVER SEE A TAX BILL, BUT THEY PAY IN DEDUCTIONS FROM WAGES, IN INCREASED COST OF WHAT THEY BUY, OR IN BROAD CESSATION OF EMPLOYMENT"

EXPECT BANNER CROWD, CROYDON ARENA, TONIGHT

Champions and runners-up of the recent Golden Glove tournament will be featured tonight in the Croydon Arena as the Daggert Boxing Club conducts another of its weekly amateur boxing shows. The largest crowd of the season is expected to jam the hall to witness ten of the best bouts that could be carded.

Included in the list of fighters are Al Brown and Joe Sankey. Brown and Sankey were crowned champions in the 118 and 147-pound class, respectively. By virtue of his victory Sankey retained his championship. The Germantown fighter was extended to win the diadem as his foe in that contest, also for tonight, Johnny J. Johnson, a colored lad from Sigma Theta, was on top of him all the time.

In the first round, Johnson twice staggered Sankey and despite a gallant rally by the champion, carried the canto by a close margin. Sankey more than made up for the whipping he took in the first session by pounding his opponent unmercifully in the final two rounds. If the fight tonight is but one-half of the showing these youngsters made in Philadelphia it will keep the crowd on its feet throughout. This fight is listed as the wind-up.

The semi-windup will see Al Brown mix it with Danny Murray, Arena. Murray has fought in this section several times while it will be Brown's first appearance here. Brown is the colored youth who stopped Sammy Baiocchi, St. Ann's, in the Camden tournament and later went on to capture the Jersey championship.

A Bristol youth has also been matched by Matchmaker Mickey Giordano. He is Tally Sciarra, St. Ann's. Sciarra will have a tough foe in Angelo Ambrosano, Mason, who is undefeated. Ambrosano beat Mike Diodati, Seymour, in the last show here. Sciarra has been idle since the close of the outdoor season but has kept himself in shape and feels certain of a victory over Ambrosano.

The local patrons will also be able to see the return bout between Billy Blade and William Boudah. This contest was scheduled for last Wednesday but called off when Blade was unable to put in an appearance. The substitute for him made a poor match and was kayoed in the first round. Blade and Boudah staged a wonderful pounding exhibition two weeks ago with Blade being the winner after being saved by the bell in the first round.

Jack Watson, Arena, Jimmy Bolton, conqueror of Joie Scheckler, James Maxwell, and Benny Arizzi, all runners-up in the Golden Glove tournament, have been matched. Watson fights Frankie Lamont, proud holder of a long winning streak. Bolton is hooked with Nathaniel Hines, Arena. Arizzi has a colored foe in George Cay, Sigma Theta.

The other bouts scheduled have not been sanctioned but will be before the starting time of the first bout which is eight-thirty o'clock sharp.

ST. ANN'S TO OPEN SEASON ON LANDRETH FIELD

The St. Ann's Golden Avalanche will open its home season Sunday on Landreth field, meeting the strong Dittman A. C., of Philadelphia. The largest crowd of the season is anticipated to see the proteges of Coach Bill Dougherty in action on the home lot.

The Saints have played two games this season and dropped them both after hard fights. In both tilts the resident team was outweighed considerably. Dittman will be an even match for the localites who are anxious to nab their first triumph of the year.

Coach Dougherty had his boys through an intensive drill last night on the St. Ann's practice field and corrected the faults of the Mt. Holly game. After two hours of drilling he gave them blackboard practice. The next practice session is scheduled for tomorrow night.

Ford Lauds Landon And Endorses Him for Presidency

from the American way of doing things. The trouble with the Presidency is that a man may say and intend one thing, but pressure may compel him to do something different. Governor Landon impressed me as a man who would resist pressure. He knows the difficulty of the job before him, but he believes he can have adjustments that will help everything move along more smoothly. I think he can.

"He is a business man who knows how to make both ends meet, and he is a sympathetic, thoughtful person. He ate out of a dinner bucket for years and he still thinks along with the men who carry dinner buckets. It is not a pose with him—it is his nature. After having this long talk with him I admire and believe in him; I hope he is elected."

Declaring he was not criticizing the New Deal—"I only say we have had enough of it, we have had about all the country can stand,"—he thanked it for "keeping us on the alert for our country." He said manufacturers had been "deluded by New Deal promises but "of course, they awoke out of that dream, because the promises that were made to them could not be kept."

Then, he denounced the New Deal's "social security" program.

Tells About Stocking Delaware With Fish

the country that contains all the fresh water fish of North America.

Mr. Wessell spoke of the different problems in the raising of game for the State. He said that the State is now raising bob-white quail, ring-neck pheasants, wild turkeys, and experimenting with Hungarian partridge. The four game farms in the State are bearing the burden of this work. The nearest game farm in this section is located in nearby Schwenksville. Here quail and pheasants are raised.

Wessell, who before he entered game raising for the State, conducted a game farm of his own, also pointed out that the State is willing to give eggs or day-old birds to sportsmen or sportsmen's associations.

One difficulty encountered in the propogation of game birds is that connected with the raising of wild turkeys. Wessell stated that in one generation in captivity the wild turkey will become domesticated. A system is now being used, however, that is expected to overcome this.

After the meeting, at which Thomas Scott presided, the group went to the Rathskellar at the Elks' Home where a special stewed snapper luncheon was served.

Philadelphia, Oct. 14—Gas fumes which snuffed out the life of Mrs. Katherine Griffin, 40, in West Philadelphia today, spread illness among her mother, Mrs. Holmes, 70, and six neighbors. Mrs. Griffin was discovered dead in the kitchen of her home. Four stove jets were turned on. First aid given by policemen helped save the life of Mrs. Holmes.
